“The hardest challenge is about to get started.
It is never too late to try again!”

After losing his mentor and having a painful breakdown, the prominent taekwondo player and Olympic medalist Yoon Do-hyun gave up on everything.

Now it is time for him to start over.

He’s got the chance to become a taekwondo teacher at Jeongmyeong Physical Education High School. But will he be able to rebuild his career and help troublesome students to find a new path in their lives?

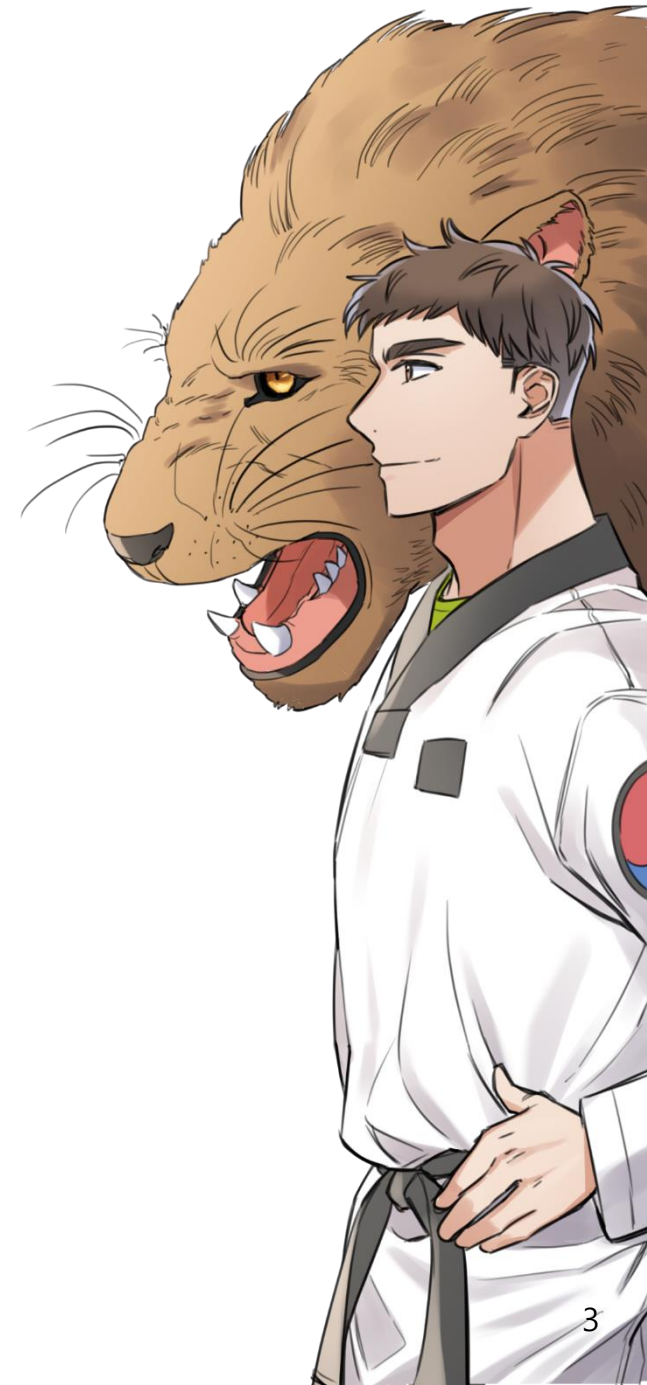

A fallen genius turned into a teacher

The Jeongmyeong High School was built to help students entrusted to the state who have been placed under protective custody.

Under the founding principle that extreme sports are the best to control young people's energy, the school focuses on martial arts as a way to encourage rehabilitation. Class D, the worst class in the third grade, was created for children who committed violent warfare and abnormal crimes, including those who were imprisoned in juvenile detention centers.

Ha Seo-rin, the granddaughter of Jeongmyeong's chairman, has been appointed as a first-time teacher and sent to work at the school, with class D. Also, their special activities are assigned to the Taekwondo department by the chairman's authority.

Growing and overcoming violence
